nothing permanent except change. Heraklitos there is the touch of love everyone becomes a poet. Plato. It is knowing that you know nothing. Socrates true knowledge exists. A most difficult thing in life is to know yourself. That is the beauty, but not everyone sees it. Confucius everything has become dyed with the color of its thoughts. Marcus Aurelius the soul dying well, are and Epicurus the art of living well and the art of education, are both, and the fruit is sweet. Aristotle the roots of thoughts. 1494 and Aristotle the soul becomes dyed with the color of its thoughts in knowing that you know nothing. Socrates true knowledge
